

COLLEGE LIBRARIES ONTARIO TELLING OUR STORY

College Libraries Ontario creates provincial online learning hub

As postsecondary students across the province shift to online learning models, College Libraries Ontario (CLO) have created a resource to assist with this transition.

Students now have access to new online resources through the newest hub of the Learning Portal that will help them navigate technology, stay motivated and study smart amid virtual learning. Known as Online Learning, this new hub was developed through the leadership of Laurel Schollen, Seneca's Vice-President Academic, and Kathryn McMillan, Seneca's Manager, Learning Centres, in partnership with Algonquin College's Libraries and Learning Centres, College Libraries Ontario and the entire Learning Portal team.

The hub features useful tips, how-to videos and learning strategies so that students can quickly find the resources they need to improve their learning aptitude for online learning. It also houses links to specific resources unique to each college. The Learning Portal team has also developed an inventory of resources for faculty, including several LMS cartridges/packages specifically for learning online.

Provincially, the Learning Portal is the flagship project of College Libraries Ontario (CLO), supported by the Ontario Colleges Library Service (OCLS), and provides online, 24-7 equitable access to library and learning centre support and resources for Ontario's online college students — in both French and English. It also provides faculty support for AODA, Indigenous inclusion and development, copyright and use of OERs in the classroom. The portal was created using content donated by several colleges and learning centres.
